What is community access?

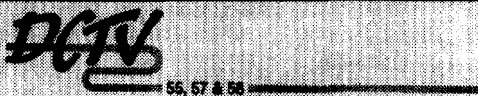

Denver's access services and resources are currently available as a result of the successful cable franchise negotiations in 1984 between the City and County of Denver and Mile Hi Cablevision. Denver's public access services and resources are managed by a community-based nonprofit organization called Denver Community Television (DCTV). The services include television production training, technical assistance, program preparation and scheduling, studios, cameras, and a mobile production van all free of charge. To get a monthly schedule of the community access channels, call DCTV at 573-5910 and ask to receive the ACCESS Guide.

How can I get directly involved with community access?

You can begin by bringing your ideas for programs to DCTV if you are a resident of Denver, Glendale, or Lowry Air Force base. We will help you try to find a volunteer to produce your program, you can produce your own program, and you can learn to be a crew member to help other producers. Attend our next orientation to learn how. During orientation, you may sign up for workshops offered at DCTV. The workshops offered are basic lighting, producer, studio, editing, portapak, graphics, audio, and directing. The only cost is a small materials fee. You will be able to use modern television studios, equipment, portable cameras and a mobile production van, all free of charge. These are available for making nonprofit, noncommercial programs for cable casting on DCTV's Channels 57, 58, or 55 on the Mile Hi Cablevision system.

Take advantage of this opportunity to discover an exciting new skill. For more information about community access, call DCTV at 573-5910.

Your Gateway to the Community

Produce your own noncommercial television show if you are a resident of Denver, Glendale, or Lowry AFB. Denver Community Television provides free training and facilities. Call 573-5910 for more information. Watch DCTV Channels 55, 57, and 58 on Mile Hi Cablevision

DCTV is a Public Access Project of the City and County of Denver, funded in part by Mile Hi Cablevision.

Welcome to DCTV

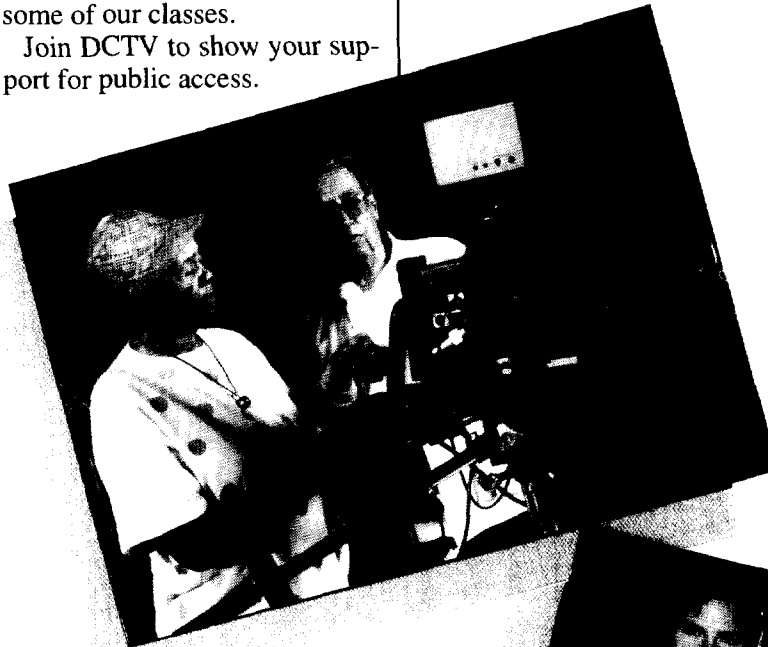

Produce your show about any topic of interest to you and volunteer as a crew member on other productions. Public access television is virtually anything you want it to be: personal statement, artistic expression, community forums, views, and public affairs.

As a public access user, you will use modern television studios, edit suites, portable cameras, and a mobile production van free of charge. These are available for making nonprofit, noncommercial programs about any topic of interest to you for playing on DCTV's Channels 57 and 58. Free training for producers and crew members is available for residents of Denver and Glendale. Classes are available in production and technical aspects of television for a small materials' charge. People with prior education and experience on equipment like ours may test out of some of our classes.

Workshop Descriptions Offered by DCTV

Producer

The producer class is for those who want to produce a program. There is no training on the studio equipment that your volunteer crew members will use. Rather, emphasis is on DCTV producer procedures, technical requirements, pre-production planning, crew positions for productions, scripting, script marking, and information necessary for a good production.

Prerequisite: orientation.

Basic lighting

This is an entry level class for prospective crew members who will be taking studio and portapak classes. Basic three-point-subject, set, and base lighting, along with gels and scrims will be discussed. Participants will practice various lighting situations. Not everyone needs to climb the ladder to learn how to hang lights.

Prerequisite: orientation

Test out of this class with prior experience.

* Studio

Sign up for this workshop if you want to operate studio equipment. This class will introduce studio equipment such as cameras, videotape recorders, switchers, audio boards, and time base correctors to a beginning crew person. * Portapak DCTV provides portable video equipment for shooting film style or documentary style in the field. To use this equipment, you need to take this workshop in basic field lighting, sound recording, site surveying, and the setup and operation of a portable camera and video tape recorder. This class will also cover using the Hi-8 camera. Complete a lab to receive your certificate.

Test out of this class with prior experience.

* Graphics

In this workshop, participants will learn more advanced graphics than in studio class. The character generator will be discussed and students will get hands-on practice with it while making titles, credits, rolls, crawls, page sequences, and simple animation.

* Directing

What does the director do anyway? If you want clarification on that question, this workshop will try to answer it. Who the director talks to, what cues and signals the director uses for different crew members, responsibilities, script marking, program segments, and more are discussed. Each participant will have a chance to sit in the director's chair and rotate through the crew positions.

* Audio

If you've been through the studio workshop and still are intimidated by all those knobs on the audio mixers, you'll want to take this workshop. Microphone placement, types of microphones available, audio levels, audio mixer, and audio on the record deck are discussed. Participants will have time for some hands-on experience.

* Editing

When the producer shoots in the field film style, a lot of editing will be required. When a studio production is shot, some editing may be necessary to complete the program.

Participants in this workshop will have some hands-on experience to learn about using edit equipment at DCTV. This will include play and record decks, time base correctors, switchers, character generators, audio mixers, waveform monitors, vectorscopes, etc. Tape logging, edit decision plans, and both insert and assemble editing will be discussed.

Test out of this class with prior experience.

* Mobile production van orientation

Learn how to produce and crew on the remote shoot. The van serves as the control room with switcher, monitors, audio board, and record deck. The cameras are set up to tape your program. Become van certified to qualify to work on van shoots.

We want your show

Contact DCTV staff if you need help getting started.

When you complete the Producer Class, schedule your observation of a production and plan your two-minute production. No other classes are necessary for you to produce your show since you will use the experience of other community access users to help you. The required labs for some of the classes will make it easier to get volunteers. Recruit volunteers by using some of these ideas:

1. Volunteer to work on other producers' projects to meet volunteer access users.

2. Request a list from DCTV production staff of access users available during your shoot or edit time.

3. Post your needs on the bulletin board.

4. Join DAPA (Denver Access Production Association) to get to know more public access users.

5. Check the class schedule on the bulletin board and visit classes to recruit help from new volunteers.

6. Request staff to arrange for intern assistance (pending availability).

7. Find someone who is good at recruiting volunteers and ask them to arrange for the crew.

Want to be a Producer?

Complete the requirements to be certified as a volunteer access producer. Meet with the Production Manager to review and submit your program proposal. When this is approved, we will call you and you can immediately schedule the required facilities. Use the normal order for your program. It must be exactly two minutes in length. Start timing it when your program begins (after the color bars and slate) and end at two minutes (120 seconds) after your credits and disclaimer. Submit your finished program for screening by filling out the Program Information Sheet and placing it on the shelf outside of Edit 1. Remember to sign the back of the form. A DCTV staff member will call you when your program has been approved for cable casting.

Now you are ready to begin your full-length program.
